

ANOTHER SIDE TO THE ORANGE RIOTS

Woman Reader Challenges
Statements in Rev. J. Talbot
Smith's Catholic History.

The Editor of The Evening World:
Your paper is noted for fairness, and while I realize that you do not accept responsibility for statements in signed contributions at the same time I cannot let go unchallenged the references to Orangemen made by the Rev. J. Talbot Smith in his history of the Catholic Diocese of New York. I ask you to reprint from a New York newspaper an article dealing with the riots of 1871.

"As the Loyal Orange Lodges march through the streets of New York tomorrow, the stirring times of 1871 will be brought vividly to the minds of the older citizens. The Orangemen made their first parade in this year and a riot that was quickly quelled by the militia and in which a number of lives were lost was the result."

"Oakey Hall was then Mayor of New York and granted a permit to the Orangemen to parade and hold their picnic in Elm Park, then on the corner of Ninety-second street and Eighth avenue. Immediately a howl which became louder as time wore on went up from the Catholics of the city. They claimed that in New York, which they called a Catholic city, no procession of Orangemen would be allowed.

"The Produce Exchange took up the case of the latter and said they would arm 30,000 men if necessary in order to keep the 150 paraders from molesting a committee from the Exchange brought Gov. Hoffman down to the city, and he at once ordered out the Ninth Regiment under command of Fisk, and the Forty-eighth under Col. Conkling, a brother of Roscoe Conkling, who were detailed as a special escort to act with the police. One hundred reporters were also sworn in as special deputies to accompany the parade."

"The procession formed on Eighth avenue, near Twenty-ninth street, the militia leading. It had reached Twenty-fifth street when suddenly a shower of rocks and stones were hurled from the house tops and a deadly fire of bullets rained around the troops, the assailants firing from behind the blind shutters of the houses from both sides of the avenue."

"It has never been known whether a command was given, but the militia suddenly wheeled and fired several volleys at the occupants of the roofs and windows.
"How many of the mob were killed was not ascertained, as it is claimed that many of them were secretly buried. Several Orangemen were killed and a number of the militiamen were wounded, but their prompt action immediately checked the ardor of the mob."

"I have no desire to stir up bitter prejudices, but believe that truth should prevail."
